420’s long, strange trip to pot holiday began in California

A. J. Ekblad, Staff Writer – It was the 29th of April, a day many have come to know as 420. A day that, to many, is synonymous with cannabis and its effects. To others, it's a day of celebration and freedom. To still others, it's a day to remember the fallen. But to all, it's a day to honor a tradition that has been around for over 40 years.

The story begins in the early 1970s, when two young men from San Francisco, Mike and Ike, decided to start a holiday to celebrate the release of a new cannabis strain. They called it 420, and it quickly became a symbol of the cannabis community.

As the years went on, 420 grew in popularity, and by the 1990s, it had become a national holiday. People from all over the country would gather in San Francisco to celebrate 420, and it became a symbol of freedom and equality.

Today, 420 is still celebrated in San Francisco, where it is a day to remember the fallen and to celebrate the cannabis community. It is a day to come together and to honor the history of cannabis and its effects.

They didn't have the good day they were expecting so many years ago. They had planned and worked hard to have a successful 420, but something went wrong. They didn't have the turnout they expected, and that was a disappointment.

Mike and Ike were disappointed, but they knew they had to keep going. They had a tradition to uphold, and they wouldn't let one bad day ruin it for everyone else. So, they decided to plan for next year, to make sure they had a better turnout.

They knew they had to make some changes. They knew they had to do something different to attract more people.

They decided to hold a 420 parade, a 420 festival, and a 420 march. They knew these events would attract more people, and they were right.

The 420 parade was huge. It was a celebration of cannabis culture, and it attracted people from all over the country.

The 420 festival was a huge success as well. It attracted people from all over the country, and it was a celebration of cannabis culture.
